⚠ Watch this

What each type of work brought in and kept, against your budget and last year. Notes only where a gap is big enough to change a call.

Revenue ran $36,261 over budget at $115,256. What all work kept ran $24,234 over, a 45.2% margin against 35.3% budgeted. Against August last year, revenue is up $40,732 and profit is up $25,428.

Accrual basis. Gross profit is before truck costs: field labor sits in cost of goods at a burdened rate, trucks are overhead. Budget is the monthly budget by job type set with you at onboarding. Variance is actual minus budget.

Notes on the gaps that matter

1 ⚠ Watch this

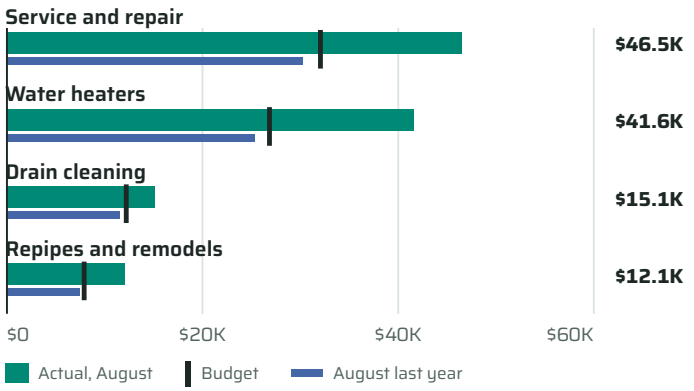

Water heaters brought in $14,760 more than budget, but its margin ran 22.9% against 32.4% budgeted, 9.5 points short. At the budgeted margin that work would have kept $3,932 more. Last August it brought in $25,323. Price or job cost moved, so check the last few tickets before you quote more of this work.

2 ✓ On track

Every job type beat budget. Revenue ran $36,261 over, 45.9%, and what all work kept ran $24,234 over. Last August brought in $74,524. If September runs the same way, the budget is set too low across the board, and we should reset it together.

A note shows only where a job type misses or beats its budget by 10% or more and by at least $3,950 of revenue or $1,393 of what it kept (5% of the month's budget).

Revenue by job type, August: actual, budget and last year

2.3% of August cost of goods ($1,442) isn't assigned to a job type yet. It sits on its own line so the totals still tie.

Cover: 1.34 on the service and repair margin, 48.1%.

Cash: $43,507 over your floor at the tightest week with the hire.

Slowest three months (Oct, Sep, Nov): with one more tech, each would bring in about $17,249 a month, against the $17,057 a month the hire needs to break even.

Rules of thumb for revenue per new tech, which disagree by more than two to one:

- $200,000 a year per service truck (Leach, 2013)
- $343,200 per single-tech truck (Ruth King's hourly build-up)
- $492,230 at five times burdened cost, a stretch goal, not a gate

Trucks: the cost above includes a dedicated truck. Section 179 and bonus depreciation are tax questions for your CPA.

7 Frank's notes and open questions

Watch this

Frank's read on August and the questions only you can answer. Then what to watch in October.

Frank's notes

August brought in $115,256, $36,261 over the budget we set and $40,732 more than last August. Every job type beat its number, so the budget we built off last year is set too low. I'll reset it with you before September's report.

Water heaters are the one I want to talk about. They kept 22.9% in August, against 32.4% last August and under the 40% to 52% band. Volume is up $16,279 on last August, so the margin went somewhere: either the equipment costs more or the extras aren't making it onto the ticket. That's the first question below.

$1,442 of August parts and materials didn't get a job type. That's 2.3% of cost of goods, so it doesn't change the picture, but I want it clean before September closes.

You're still new with us, so a couple of numbers use defaults until your own history fills in: the seasonal pattern is an assumption, and collections lean on the default curve for the older invoices. They're labeled wherever they show up.
